

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system of managing image data in a network comprises a scanner, a printer and a client computer, each connected to the network. The printer includes a storage section for storing image data inputted by the scanner, and the client computer manages the image data stored in the storage section via the network. The system allows reductions in scale of the network system and its build-up cost.